Discuss IT Topic: If you had the ability to download memories throughout your life to then one day review them like a photo album, would you do it? These memories have to be kept on the cloud. This means you are connected and your eyesight would be no different than looking through a camera.

Response: Please make sure all grammar, spelling, indentation, and punctuation is correct.

I wouldn't do it. Haha. ~~NOPE~~ The thought scares me and even upsets me. I would rather remember my life and my story through my eyes and not download them. I hate the idea of turning your precious memories into something digital, which can be hacked, edited, or lost. It would lose the authenticity of having memories to look back on for yourself and yourself only. I would rather people imagine what it would be like to step into my shoes than to literally step into them in my day-to-day life. If my "memory cloud" was hacked by the government or something outrageous happened to them, they could edit my memories and change something I said or did to influence me. I imagine when I'm taking a shower, and you know how you be ams and what not to make sure your body is healthy and clean (i.e. self breast checks, etc.). Imagine that being sent up into the cloud because it is, after all, a memory. If someone hacks or steals it, there goes my privacy. Even aside from nudity and other graphic topics, it's a general risk and absolute invasion of my privacy, whether I'm lucky and nothing happens to those memories or not. It's my private life exposed to the internet. I'd rather not be known well enough than be so well known that people can count the number of birthmarks/beauty marks that are on my body and tell me things that I didn't even know about myself. The very idea of someone telling me something about myself that I never knew scares the living crap out of me. Therefore, polite pass on the "memory cloud"
